

“We are proud to be a part of the 9-1-1 community and to support the efforts of our members in providing the best possible service to the public.”

Leadership Association in the Heart of the Matter

At a recent meeting, the Association of 9-1-1 Administrators (A91A) met with the leadership of the National Association of Public Safety Officers (NASPO) and the National Association of Public Safety Officers (NASPO) to discuss the importance of public safety officers in the 9-1-1 community. The meeting was held in a conference room at the A91A headquarters in Phoenix, Arizona. The meeting was attended by representatives from both organizations, including A91A President and CEO, and NASPO President and CEO. The meeting was a productive one, with both organizations expressing their commitment to public safety and their willingness to work together to improve the 9-1-1 system. The meeting also provided an opportunity for the two organizations to share their experiences and best practices. The meeting was a success, and it is hoped that it will lead to further collaboration between the two organizations in the future.

The meeting was a success, and it is hoped that it will lead to further collaboration between the two organizations in the future. The meeting was a success, and it is hoped that it will lead to further collaboration between the two organizations in the future. The meeting was a success, and it is hoped that it will lead to further collaboration between the two organizations in the future.

